

If only

If only we were happy to see them return home

If only we loved our neighbour

If only we were open to strangers

If only we collected stamps

If only we felt empathic

If only we wrote love letters

If only we could keep the ball in the air

If only we freaked out over forest lakes

If only we were a bit more patient

If only everything was as yesterday

If only we loved green tomatoes

If only we gave stuff away that we don't need anymore

If only we chewed our food a bit slower

If only we could talk with each other

If only we danced

If only we did just some of the things we dreamed about

If only we could see inwardly

If only we embroidered canvas

If only we put our own house in order

If only we took a deep breath ten times a day

If only we omitted condemnation

If only we imagined the other person's troubles

If only we refrained from controlling others

If only we saw the best in our fellow man

If only we realized when it isn't our business

If only we looked with kind eyes on an angry person

If only we could recycle most things

If only we understood that aggression is related to fear

If only we could learn to say no

If only we found our passion

If only we kept a suitable distance

If only we caught sight of the presence
If only we were happy with what we've got
If only we considered others before ourself
If only we could laugh at the absurd
If only we were a bit more attentive
If only we loved ourselves
If only we took time to do the most important things
If only everything shouldn't be in a certain way
If only we could see our own imperfections
If only our intentions were good
If only we could learn to use ourselves
If only we had no reasons to hate
If only everybody had enough to eat
If only the 1% made something good with their fortunes
If only we had the courage to see
If only we didn't feel guilty
If only we didn't simulate but actually helped without reservations
If only we weren't prejudiced
If only we had the courage to take the plunge
If only we put more effort into our cooking
If only we could forget about ourselves for a minute
